Morningsider

The magazine has a new look! For the first time in eight years, we completed a redesign to celebrate the continued growth of the college.

The Morningsider has been around for more than 70 years. It started out as a newspaper and later evolved into a magazine. Even 20 years ago, it was still primarily a black-and-white publication.

The transformation of the magazine in recent years has been amazing. We have turned it into a modern publication that is visually appealing and reader friendly. With the redesign, we are redoubling our efforts. We also are expanding the most popular section of the magazine, the class notes.

It's easy to forget how far we've come. That is true for both the magazine and the college as a whole.

When we debuted the last Morningsider redesign, a transformation had taken place at the college. We had just turned the old parking lot at the center of campus into a park-like setting where students, faculty and staff could meet and interact. We had added a coffee shop to the library and made the dining hall look more like a restaurant than a college cafeteria. We had renovated athletic facilities and built a new softball complex and apartment-style residence halls.

Morningside was as strong as it ever had been. Now it is even stronger.

In the past eight years, we have constructed the first academic building on campus in 40 years and an advising center where full-time, professional advisers focus on meeting the needs of first-year students. We have completed a $14 million renovation of Dimmitt Hall and renovated Eppley Auditorium.

Along with facilities improvements, we have strengthened academic and extracurricular programs. Morningside has added several new majors to meet the needs of students and employers in the area, as well as new sports and new music ensembles. We also have made improvements to our graduate education program, and it has grown by almost 60 percent as a result.

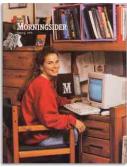

Much has been accomplished, and the college will continue to grow.

We want to do a better job of teaching students to use mathematical reasoning to solve real-world problems, so we are creating a new course that focuses on this topic. Starting in January, we will offer an online bachelor's degree completion program, and we recently received approval to offer a Master of Science in Nursing degree.

As the college grows, so should The Morningsider. We are excited about the changes, but also what remains the same. The magazine will continue to tell great stories about the college and our alumni. The college remains committed to a personalized, values-laden education that's anchored in the skills that the liberal arts teach so well.

I look forward to your feedback on the magazine. We hope you enjoy this issue!

The World at Our Doorstep

Morningside welcomes record number of new international students

By Amanda Girres, student intern

When Jesseca Ormond left behind the blue skies and beautiful beaches of the Caribbean to study at Morningside College last fall, she had no idea what to expect.

"You need an entire guidebook if you're moving to Iowa," said Ormond, a resident of the island of Antigua. "Living in a place that snows is a lot. I was so excited the first day and the first week. And then it kept falling, and it kept falling."

But there must be something special about Morningside College. This year the number of international students on campus was more than ever before. The college was home to a total of 52 students representing 16 different countries.

This record-breaking number is largely due to the 31 new international students Morningside welcomed last fall. Usually in the fall, there are less than 10 new students.

"We were head over heels," said Mary Krejci, designated school official for international students at Morningside.

Despite being so far from their families, international students have no problem making themselves at home on campus, becoming active members of sports teams, clubs and organizations. Of the 52 students, 31 are members of an athletic team, eight are involved in music and 14 were recently initiated into the first-year honor societies.

In just two semesters, freshman Ormond has shown little hesitation in becoming involved in such activities.

"I'm really introverted, but I like communicating with people so I'll put myself out there," she said.

In addition to being the vice president of the International Student Association, she was also involved in Morningside College Student Government, SHADES (Students Helping Achieve Diversity and Equality Socially), Photo Club and the campus radio station, KMSC.

"What I really enjoy is being a D.J. on the radio station," Ormond said. "I think that's super cool because I get to control what somebody listens to for an hour."

International students are certainly making the most of their time on campus, but this experience benefits others as well. Local students, faculty and staff believe that international students bring an invaluable and unique cultural experience to campus, adding to the firsthand educational opportunities at Morningside.

"What an experience in the classroom that you're not going to get everywhere," said Terri Curry, vice president for student life and enrollment. "I don't think there's anything better for a campus community than to have globalization right on your campus."

The friendly, close-knit environment of Morningside College provides fertile ground for international friendships to blossom. Although they are so far from home, many international students feel as if they have a family at Morningside.

While sharing his adventure at Morningside College, Katsuhisa Yokoyama 2016 of Japan recalled his experience going home with a local friend.

"I visited my friend from the swim team," Yokoyama said. "He is from Nebraska. After the visit, I better understood American culture. Families here are very close, and everyone is so friendly."

Yokoyama noted that he never would have had this opportunity at his previous school, a university of 50,000 students in Japan.

"In a huge Japanese university, I could make many friends, but I wouldn't get to visit their families," he said. "The friendships would be short term. Morningside is kind of small, but we can know each other more deeply."

Ashley Stagner of Columbus Junction, Iowa, roomed with another international student from Japan. She believes local students gain a lot from their friendships with international students.

"They bring the benefit of a new culture," Stagner said.
"A lot of people are from small towns. You don't really get the opportunity to experience a lot of culture, so any time you get that opportunity, it's phenomenal."

Faculty and staff have also taken an interest in building relationships with the international students, inviting them into their offices on numerous occasions to make them feel more at home.

"If I were their mom, I would hope someone would be there to answer their questions, say stop in, and really mean it," said Curry.

In fact, the friendliness of the students, faculty and staff is one of the things that Ormond loves the most about Morningside College.

"I really enjoy and I really appreciate the fact that they're so welcoming," she said. "I know that they're crazy busy, but they're willing to listen and encourage you to drop by and say hi. It just makes you feel like you have a family, and that's why I really love Morningside."

This year there were more international students on campus than ever before. This was largely due to the 31 new international students who arrived at Morningside in the fall, making the college home to a total of 52 international students representing 16 different countries.

By Dr. Ross Fuglsang Associate Professor of Mass Communication

Being a newspaper editor isn't the most stable of careers in the Internet age, but Andy McGinn 1999 is breathing new life into The Jefferson Herald, his hometown newspaper.

The Morningside alum returned to Iowa in December 2013 to take over as editor of the community newspaper. Each week he delivers to his readers a "big picture window on the county."

"Ninety-eight percent of the people love it. It's exciting," McGinn said. "One week it's going to be a story about a POW and the next week it's going to be about an ultimate fighter. They don't know week-to-week what we're doing. Sometimes I don't know week-to-week what I'm doing."

The strategy is working. Since McGinn took charge, the Herald has earned nine Iowa Newspaper Association awards for writing, design and community service. During a Leap Year Sale on Feb. 29, they signed up 94 new subscriptions. Not bad for a town of 4,500 people.

"By small-town weekly standards, I think we're doing things you wouldn't expect," McGinn said. "I'm playing to my own strengths. If you ever wondered what would happen if one of the feature guys got hold of a whole newspaper, this is it."

McGinn credits the Herald's recent success to the newspaper's owners, Ann Wilson and Doug Burns, who

Difference maker

Grad comes home to re-create his hometown newspaper bought it in 2012 and gave it a facelift.

"They're trying to bring it into the modern era. The paper very much looked like it had in the '50s. Like 20 things on the front page. You expected one of them to be 'Horse thief caught; Lynching tonight,'" he said.

Now there are just two or three stories on the front page. The people of Jefferson and Greene County are front and center in brightly-written articles with large color photos. The newspaper is actually fun.

Andy McGinn 1999 left his job at a daily newspaper to become a one-man news staff at the weekly newspaper in his hometown of Jefferson, lowa. "If you ever wondered what would happen if one of the feature guys got hold of a whole newspaper, this is it," he said. Photo by Jeff Storjohann, Herald Publishing.

"We have a pretty good mix of hard news and human interest. Generally, the visual lead will be a human interest story," Andy explained. "You have to have hard news or people don't feel like they're getting their money's worth. Hard news is like the vegetables on the plate if you're a meat eater."

McGinn adds, with no apology, that in the time he has been at the newspaper, he has not been to a single school board meeting. The Herald prints minutes of city council and county supervisor meetings, and he'll attend if the agendas suggest something important will be discussed.

"I'm a one-man news staff," he said. "Do we want to just go to city council, board of supervisors, school board... or do we want to try something new, something different and have stories about people? I've found that people like reading about people, and they don't necessarily like reading about things. If they

Rubbing elbows with the famous

Andy McGinn 1999 returned to lowa in December 2013 to take over as editor of his hometown newspaper, The Jefferson Herald.

Before returning, however, he was an entertainment writer for the Springfield News-Sun in Ohio. For 14 years he shared his gift of gab with a who's who of celebrities. Some famous, some not.

"Some of my all-time favorite subjects in Springfield were unheralded local guys who had brushes with fame themselves," McGinn says. "Like the country singer from the '50s who had a voice like Hank Williams but whose career was doomed by the fact that he was in a wheelchair from polio. By the time I arrived in Springfield, he was a regular on the local karaoke circuit."

Another favorite was Joe "Jody" Parsley. The 84-year-old walked into the News-Sun offices claiming to have invented rap music. McGinn was the only person who listened to his story, which was picked up by a number of national media outlets.

"USA Today actually reached out to me in 2008 because they needed someone in that part of the country to cover the opening night of a Reba McEntire/Kelly Clarkson joint tour in Dayton, Ohio. Imagine my surprise when I opened up that email. Here's USA Today asking me to essentially review a concert for them... on deadline. Naturally, I jumped at the chance.

"They set me up in a skybox at the arena and I pounded out a piece for them. That assignment turned into me writing a series of short features as part of USA Today's ongoing coverage of 'American Idol' in which I did update stories on previous seasons' finalists. They were all featured in a special commemorative magazine, but they also ran the stories over the course of like 10 or 11 weeks in the paper."

did, more people would be at your average city council meeting."

Education and Preparation

McGinn hasn't changed much from his days at Morningside. Red hair. Elfin face. Giddy laugh. As entertainment editor for The Collegian Reporter, he cultivated a wry, witty and generally unconventional writing style that is still evident in his Herald reporting.

The student who once took the Eppley Auditorium stage in chaps and red underwear is more serious as an adult. He's married, a father, and as a newspaper editor, a community leader.

His strategy for making the Herald relevant for Greene County readers was developed over years of working for a large metro daily newspaper in Ohio.

"Working for a daily, you could see what was possible, and there's no reason we can't replicate that on a small-town scale," he said. "I mean, why do small-town papers have to have crappy design, for lack of a better word? If I go to the hospital here in Jefferson, I want the best care possible. I don't want crap care because it's a small town."

After graduating from Morningside, McGinn accepted a page designer job with The Fort Dodge Messenger. Within six months, he realized "putting together an international news brief package for the Thursday paper was not exciting me. I realized I really wanted to write full time."

He and his wife, Amy (Divis) 1999, packed up and moved to Springfield, Ohio. His position as an entertainment writer for the Springfield News-Sun turned out to be the perfect gig.

In his 14 years at the News-Sun, McGinn exploited a unique writing style, a love of pop culture, and the opportunity to have fun doing his job. He interviewed a who's who of celebrities for both the News-Sun and USA Today, and wrote a weekly column, "McGinn Again."

And he may just be kidding when he refers to himself as "the D.W. Griffith of newspapers," but in 2007 he was named Best Videographer by the Ohio Newspaper Association.

A highlight of the News-Sun years was a trip to Los Angeles in 2005 to cover the Grammy Awards and Springfield native John Legend.

"I was writing stories about John Legend before he even got a record deal. I just had a sense something big was going to happen," McGinn explained. Legend received eight nominations, and the newspaper sent Andy and a photographer to L.A. for nearly a week.

"We got to hang out with him and his family. We were in his hotel room when he was getting ready," McGinn says, a bit of wonder still in his voice. "Access Hollywood came and did a shoot with him. We sat and watched as his brother gave him a haircut. Then it's like, 'Excuse me, I have to take a shower now.' That kind of story opportunity.... To come right out of Iowa and do that kind of stuff was incredible."

Coming Home

Those good times and the ability to have fun writing came less and less often, however, as the News-Sun cut staff, consolidated its newsroom with other newspapers and de-emphasized features and entertainment. McGinn found himself on the news beat, eventually covering the military beat and drone warfare.

"I went from all that to writing about drone warfare. It was quite the change, but in retrospect, my time writing about the military and veterans made me a much more well-rounded writer, and some of my favorite stories so far in Jefferson have been about local veterans," he explained.

Though it felt like time to leave the News-Sun, McGinn nearly passed on the Herald job. When his mom asked him if he'd be interested in being the Herald editor, his immediate response was, "Are you kidding me?" He had no interest in the newspaper he remembered. A day later he had his application in the mail.

"If the opening had come five years earlier, it would have been a solid no," he said. After some thought, he decided to look at the Herald's ad on journalismjobs.com. "By the last word, I was getting my portfolio ready. What clicked with me was 'come practice journalism free of corporate politics and structure.' I was on the floor drooling."

That same night he sent Doug Burns his portfolio; Burns called the next day to set up an interview. Burns was scheduled to attend a convention in Chicago so they met in the middle: Lafayette, Ind. Two hours later, Andy, Amy and their son, Henry, were moving back to Jefferson.

Looking back, Andy calls the News-Sun a 14-year training ground for his position at the Herald. "I got my education at Morningside, but with newspapers, you have to just start doing it. You have to be immersed in that culture."

McGinn describes the move back to Jefferson as "equal parts surreal and rewarding." The reward for McGinn has been to reconnect with his hometown and the people of Greene County. The reward for Herald subscribers is an attractive, modern newspaper.

Walker Faculty Excellence Awards

Outside evaluators selected the recipients.

Criteria for selection included teaching excellence, effective advising, scholarship and service to the college during the previous academic year.

Susie Lubbers is an assistant professor of education who has been on the faculty since 2006. Award evaluators said much of her work is invisible to the community as a whole, yet it is important in shaping Morningside and its students. Teaching is clearly a strength. In the classroom, she creates an environment that is challenging, responsive to student needs and relevant to their future careers. She embraces new technologies and pedagogies. She also models life-long learning and continuous growth as a professional.

Dr. Jeremy Schnieder is an assistant professor of writing and rhetoric who has been on the faculty since 2010. He has a passion for effective teaching methods that are creative, different and interactive. Even when assignment topics were "seemingly impossible," students said he taught them how to take nothing and turn it into something spectacular. As a scholar, he is active both individually and through collaborative projects. This is his second Walker Faculty Excellence Award. He received his first award in 2011.

Dr. Alden Stout is an assistant professor of philosophy who has been on the faculty since 2011. Evaluators said he led one of the most lively and interesting classes they had ever seen. During the year, he gave two professional presentations and had two published articles. Three of the four papers connected to pedagogy, while the other explored a topic strongly connected to a recent Morningside class. When teaching creates opportunities for scholarship and scholarship connects back to the classroom, both faculty and students benefit.

Thompson Staff Excellence Awards

Barb (Schelp) Chambers 1977, director of graduate education, has devoted her working life to education. Her commitment to the graduate education program led her to move recently into a key administrative role. She has accepted every challenge that has been thrown her way, and she is well-respected for her administrative skills.

Stacie Hays, career services, is committed to students. Her door is always open for conversation or advice. Coworkers are impressed with the energy she dedicates to every student. Her efforts to build community partnerships have been enormously successful and have benefited students and the college.

Tom Maxon, head coach for men's and women's soccer, has been described as having a heart of gold. He meets weekly with athletes to see how college is going. He says every student has a role on the team, and without them, the team is not strong. He understands the number one goal for his athletes is to be successful students.

Adam Fullerton, library services director, understands the important role technology plays in learning. He has used technology to virtually bring internationally known speakers to campus. Under his leadership, the learning center has continued its transformation into a warm and welcoming space for students.

Jay Malin, head groundskeeper, deserves much of the credit for the beautiful appearance of the Morningside College campus. In the spring and summer, visitors see beautiful lawns, thriving flower beds, and well-tended trees and bushes. In the winter, they notice sidewalks that are clear of snow.

Amy (Gerdes) Williams 1998, senior associate director of admissions, believes in the Morningside experience and all the positive opportunities the college has to offer students. Colleagues see her as a positive role model and mentor and notice she is constantly looking for ways to improve. Williams also was named staff employee of the year.

Stacie Hays, career services, is president of the Iowa College Recruiting Network, a cooperative recruiting service that connects employers with students at Iowa's private colleges.

New Appointments

Shiran Nathaniel, director of alumni relations, will build and enhance ties with alumni living in all 50 states and 165 foreign countries. He managed food services at Morningside through Sodexo before becoming a college employee in 2013.

Retirements

Pam Anderson retired in December. She had served as the administrative assistant for the business department since 2004, supporting both faculty and students. She was always ready to share a smile and made time for everyone that came to Lincoln Center.

Gail Dooley, D.M., is retiring in January. She has been a professor of vocal music at Morningside since 1995. A colleague described her as a master teacher and said she is one of the most intelligent, dedicated and professional educators with whom he has ever worked. "I routinely marvel at the improvements made by students in her studio," he said. "They are challenged, empowered and sing with increased technique and sensitivity." Many of Dooley's students have been finalists in the National Association of Teachers of Singing competition. She also has performed extensively herself, both classical recitals and performances of Appalachian folk songs. She has served as chair of the music department, senator and president of the faculty senate at critical points in the history of the college, a valuable member of the Promotion and Tenure Committee, and a member of significant search committees and task forces. "Intellect and ability are pale and ineffective without the passion and courage to make hard choices and to ethically stand for your convictions," her colleague said. "Dr. Dooley displayed all of these traits and more to the great benefit of the college and our students." Dooley and her spouse, Linda Wideman 2012, are moving to Chattanooga, Tenn., to be closer to family. They look forward to lots of camping and kayaking in the Smoky Mountains.

Jim Hopkins, CPA, retired in May as a full-time professor. He joined the business department in 1986 and has become synonymous with the teaching of accounting at Morningside. He also is known for going out of his way to help colleagues. "Jim Hopkins loves helping others - offering tips on tax preparation, dates when taxes are due and insights into the tax system," a colleague said. "And he prepares students for the industry - they learn by doing." While at Morningside, Hopkins wrote a chapter published in "Lexis Guide to Family Tax Matters" and wrote articles that appeared in journals published by the National Association of Tax Professionals, the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, and the New York Society of CPAs. The articles published in CPA Journal and Tax Adviser were co-authored with Morningside students. Over the years, Hopkins has been an important member of the college's Finance and Facilities Committee. He also has served on the board of directors for the Taxpayers Research Council, a group that monitors spending and activities of local taxing entities. Before coming to Morningside, Hopkins worked seven years in public accounting and six years in private industry in the Sioux City area. He and his wife, Cheryl, plan on staying in Sioux City. He plans to teach one class in the fall semester and enjoy retirement.

1936 Edythe (Kunkle) Cavanaugh

was born in Lead, S.D. In 1930 or so, her family moved to Rinard, Iowa, in Calhoun County, where she graduated from high school in May 1934. She then attended Morningside College, where she completed a two-year certificate for elementary education. From 1936 until 1943, she taught elementary school in Lohrville, Iowa. In 1941, she married Clem Cavanaugh, a farmer from the Lohrville area, shortly before he began military service as a pilot with the Army Air Corps. After the war, they returned to the family farm near Lohrville, where they raised four children and were active in many church and community activities. Soon after her youngest child graduated from college in 1975, Cavanaugh joined the staff of Iowa Central Community College, facilitating G.E.D. (General Educational Development) completion for adults in the area. She worked in that capacity for nearly 20 years, retiring in 1995 at the age of 80. In 2013, at the age of 98, she moved from the farmstead to an independent living community in the Denver, Colo., area, where a son and a daughter live.

A NOTABLE LIFE Grad reflects on career in music

By Laura L. Florio

There is music in the soul of Dr. Tyrone Greive 1965. He saw a violin demonstration at age 9, came home and declared he wanted to play the violin. "Music is like a religion," he said with a laugh. "You convert one person at a time."

By his senior year in high school, Greive was playing with the Sioux City Symphony. He received a music scholarship to attend Morningside, where he continued to play for the symphony and other groups.

After his junior year at Morningside. Greive was named concertmaster for Ohio's Lakeside Summer Symphony. His talent and hard work caught the eye of several professors, including Dr. Leo Kucinski 1936, who founded the Sioux City Symphony. "Leo was both my mentor and my second father. He encouraged me to apply for a part-time faculty position at Augustana College in Sioux Falls, even though many people considered me too young and inexperienced for such a job."

Greive was indeed hired, and his senior year of college was divided between studying at Morningside and teaching at Augustana. "I used to spend the majority of the week in Sioux City, and then I would drive to Sioux Falls to teach. I had a 7:45 a.m. class on Saturdays!" he said. "I slept little. But it was a wonderful year. My education at Morningside instilled in me a passion to keep learning, and it prepared me for the things I would do later in life."

Upon graduation, Greive assumed a full-time faculty position at Augustana. He was also concertmaster for the Sioux Falls Symphony and performed with the Trio in Residence, where he met his wife, Janet Rayburn Greive. They were married in 1968. A year later, they left for Pittsburgh, Pa. He earned a master's degree at Carnegie Mellon University in 1970.

In 1975, they moved from Sioux Falls to Ann Arbor, Mich., where Tyrone received a Doctor of Musical Arts degree in 1977. "I could have stayed at Augustana for many years, but my education at Morningside taught me to pursue learning, and I realized that I required more study in order to remain competitive in my field."

After graduating from the University of Michigan, Greive taught at Stephen F. Austin State University in Nacogdoches, Texas, until 1979, when he was offered a position at the University of Wisconsin - Madison. In 1990, he became concertmaster of the Madison Symphony, a position he held until his retirement in 2010. Retiring from teaching in 2013, he still keeps in touch with his students. "To know that they learned a tradition of music that I learned from Leo and that they will add something to that tradition and pass it on to their students is rather profound."

In 1982, Greive played in an appreciation concert for Kucinski at Morningside, which prompted an interest in Polish music. That appreciation has spawned articles, recordings, trips to Poland and a book in the making called "Polish Violin Repertoire, in its historical and cultural context." Greive's article about Kucinski is available at www.morningside.edu/leo.

Hickman has published several books, including "Hope for Hurting People," which was published in 1987. After graduating from Morningside, Hickman taught in Anthon and Holstein, Iowa, until 1957. when she moved to Denver, Colo., where she resides today. For 12 years she worked for Singer Sewing Machine Co. and had a sewing skills television program on KRMA-TV, an affiliate of PBS.

1957

James Hindman, founder of the Jiffy Lube franchise, presented the lecture "Was Blind, But Now I See" on the Morningside College campus. The lecture in September was based on Hindman's 2014 book "Was Blind, But Now I See," which detailed his battle against macular degeneration that blinded him by age 77. Hindman eventually underwent an innovative procedure that surgically implanted a miniature telescope behind the iris of his left eye. While not a cure, the procedure allowed Hindman to see again. The great foundation Hindman received at Morningside College provided the stepping stone to his master's degree. Ultimately, that education helped give him the ability to handle the many unknown challenges that are related to macular degeneration.

1959

The Rev. Dr. Robert Leverenz has published a new book, "There is Nothing New Under the Sun," which compares events of the 1980s to events of today. Both that book and "That's What They Are In For! A Pastoral Memoir of a Privileged Profession" are available on Amazon. Leverenz is a United Methodist minister and social worker. He has advanced degrees from Duke Divinity School, St. Paul School of Theology and the University of Iowa. He has served parishes in Iowa and Oregon. He lives in Portland, Ore., with his wife, Melanie.

A GOOD SAMARITAN Grad leads regional health care center

By Laura L. Florio

When Becky (Boese) Pape 1978 attended Morningside, she had no idea she would one day run a major medical center. Currently the CEO of Good Samaritan Regional Medical Center in Corvallis, Ore., Pape oversees over 2,500 employees, along with physician-integrated operations on the main campus. "Health care has changed dramatically in the past few years. We are doing much more population health - moving the dial on health measures to achieve better patient outcomes for many people."

Pape spoke highly of her Morningside education. "The nursing program at Morningside provided us with clinical exposure at all three of the city's major hospitals, something that benefited me greatly later in my career. Moreover, the liberal arts emphasis taught me to be inquisitive and a life-long learner."

Morningside also offered a wonderful social environment. "I still keep in touch with many of my friends from Morningside."

Pape met her husband, Tom 1977, at Morningside. They were married right after her graduation. "Since we are both from the Sioux City area, my husband and I wanted to try another part of the United States. He was hired by a company in Corvallis, Ore., and with my nursing degree, I quickly found a job. We moved out here kind of on a lark, and here we are, 30-some years later!"

For the first few years, Pape worked in critical care and nursing education, operated a home health agency and obtained a master's degree. Then she returned to the hospital setting as director of staff education at Good Samaritan Hospital. "I came around the time the hospital was beginning its affiliations with other health organizations in the region. When I began, I worked with a staff of two to educate 400 employees. In a decade or so, those numbers had grown to 25 staff and 5,000 employees!"

Pape was then promoted to vice president of patient care services for the Albany and Lebanon hospitals.

Several years later, she was named CEO in Lebanon.

During her 10 years there, she was in charge of major capital projects and helped form a partnership with Western University in Pomona, Calif., which resulted in the construction of a new medical school in Lebanon. The first class of 100 physicians graduated in 2011.

Pape was hired to be chief operating officer for Good Samaritan Regional Medical Center in 2013 and appointed CEO in January.

As CEO, Pape works 14-hour days and attends many events on behalf of the medical center. She was recently appointed to a state task force on health care. Her life is full, but she would not have it any other way. "I don't take many vacations, but when I do, it's to a very remote part of the country," she said with a laugh.

Her favorite part of her job is interacting with staff and patients. When asked what advice she would give today's students, Pape said, "Cherish every moment! It may seem difficult now, but looking back, you'll remember all the fun you had."

PAY IT FORWARD Grad shares passion for career with students

By Laura L. Florio

Morningside helped Steve Ponder 1986 discover his passion for marketing. He recently gave back by getting students involved in a national marketing campaign that promotes the trucking industry.

Ponder originally came to Morningside to pursue a degree in chemistry. "I planned to go into the pharmacy industry, but during my first year at Morningside, I took a mass communication course, which profoundly altered my study path." Ponder became intrigued with marketing, so he created his own major, drawing from courses in business, economics and mass communication. An internship at Bass & Associates led to a job as a copywriter following graduation. For the next decade. Ponder wrote commercials for both print and broadcast media and designed marketing plans for various companies.

In 1995, Ponder was recruited by Great West Casualty, a client of Bass & Associates that specialized in providing trucking insurance. Since then, Ponder has worked his way up the corporate ladder. He is now executive vice president. "My Morningside education provided me with a very broad background,

which helps me with the work I do today by prompting me to see the world in a multidimensional way, instead of merely through the lens of business and marketing. My professors, specifically John Pinto and Doug Livermore, encouraged me to work hard and forge my own path."

Ponder sits on committees for several national organizations. Because of this. Ponder met Kevin Burch. president of Jet Express. After discussing the importance of the trucking industry and all it has to offer, they started Trucking Moves America Forward, a nonprofit organization committed to education about, promotion of and recruitment for the trucking industry. The organization raised $6 million in cash and in-kind donations during its first year of operation.

This year Ponder worked with Dr. Pam Mickelson, professor and chair of business at Morningside, to provide a real-world experience for marketing and advertising students. Students conducted marketing research and

Jay Myers proposed to Bailee Keizer 2013 at Morningside College during Homecoming 2015. Keizer attended the Homecoming church service at Morningside, thinking Myers was at their home church sticking to his normal routine. After the Homecoming church service, alumni are invited to join current members of the Morningside College Choir to sing the "Morningside Hymn." When it came time to sing the hymn, choir director Tim Watson asked Keizer to come to the center of the circle. Suddenly Keizer saw a break in the circle, and Myers came walking toward her. Then he got down on one knee and proposed. The two had met during their freshman year at Morningside College in Composition and Communication (C&C) class, but they didn't get to know each other well until their senior year, when they were both in the musical production of "Grease." They started dating shortly after that. They currently live in Blair, Neb. Keizer works at Crossroads of Western Iowa in Missouri Valley helping people with disabilities. Myers is a social worker for the Department of Health and Human Services in Blair. They both work part time at the Blair Family YMCA doing personal training and youth weight training. Keizer is also a membership manager there. They plan to get married in October of this year.

THE DONUT LADY Grad owns popular donut and coffee shop

By Laura L. Florio

Just a few years after graduating, Liz Pyburn 2010 realized her dream of owning a coffee shop.

Pyburn earned a business degree from Morningside, dedicating all her class projects to designing and running a coffee shop. She mentioned that her accounting course with Jim Hopkins and business strategies course with Mary Zink were particularly helpful for her career path. She even took an on-campus job at the Spoonholder Café to gain experience. "The classes at Morningside prepare you for real life, and there are many resources available to students."

Within three weeks of graduating, Pyburn relocated to a ski resort town called Steamboat Springs, Colo., where she worked in several of the resort coffee houses. "One of the perks of working at a ski resort is that you are given a ski pass. My friends and I would work in the mornings and ski during the afternoons. It was great."

She then took a part-time job at Milk Run, a small donut and coffee shop owned by a young couple. Several months later, the couple decided to pursue other careers and put Milk Run up for sale. Pyburn pooled together all her savings, partnered with her father, Rick, and bought the shop! Her father relocated from Sioux City to Colorado in order to help run things. Now she manages the business hiring, scheduling,

accounting and deliveries – while her father makes the donuts. Her mother, Sue, is still in Sioux City serving as associate director of admissions at Morningside.

Pyburn's day begins at 5 a.m. when she makes donut deliveries to the gas stations, hotels and other businesses around Steamboat Springs. Milk Run opens at 6:30 a.m. and closes at 12:30 p.m. - or whenever they sell out of donuts. The rest of her afternoon is spent running errands and handling the financial aspects of the shop. As Steamboat Springs is a resort town, there are lulls and rushes, but Pyburn and her father sell between 50 and 120 dozen donuts every day. "Coffee is really our secondary product. People come for our donuts. We have over 30 flavors, including Maple Bacon, Reese's, Snickers, Cookies & Cream and the Marion Donut named in memory of Pyburn enjoys her job immensely, though she admits to 70-hour work weeks, nearly no vacations and having to do a lot of subbing for her employees. The benefits far outweigh the challenges. She loves working with her father, a former hospital administrator who now bakes donuts and helps her navigate difficult business decisions.

The ski slopes in Steamboat Springs draw people from all over the world, and Pyburn enjoys interacting with them. Curt White 1976, chair of the Morningside College Board of Directors, is a customer.
Around town, Pyburn is a celebrity, affectionately known as The Donut Lady.

Milk Run was named one of the top 10 donut shops in Colorado by the website OnlyInYourState.com. If you're in the area, stop by. The donuts are delicious.

ALUMNI OFFICE UPDATE By Gene Ambroson

On June 1, a change took place in alumni relations at Morningside College. Shiran Nathaniel officially assumed the duties of alumni relations director.

Some of you already know Shiran from your student days at Morningside when he was general manager of the Sodexo food service on campus for seven years. During the past year, Shiran served as assistant director of alumni relations. And many of you may have met him at alumni events on campus or at various gatherings the alumni office sponsored around the country.

Shiran is leading the alumni office at an exciting time. Morningside is expanding alumni programs and exploring new ways to connect with the more than 11.000 alumni who live in all 50 states and 165 foreign countries. You will have many opportunities to interact with Shiran in the future — either in person or online.

I have started a new role as special projects assistant in the president's office at Morningside. In my new assignment. I will still interact with alumni - only in a slightly different way. One of my new assignments is to build an organized and highly proactive studentalumni mentorship program in cooperation with our career services staff on campus. Also, Morningside is coming up on its 125th anniversary, and I will help oversee planning and execution of that year-long celebration.

During my 20-plus years as alumni relations director, I have had the honor of serving with an incredible group of dedicated alumni who have given of themselves selflessly as members of the Morningside College Alumni Board of Directors. That group has evolved over the years to be the most proactive advocate for Morningsiders there is.

Morningside College has made tremendous progress over the past 15 years. The campus has been transformed, enrollment has grown and new academic programs are preparing students for fulfilling careers. During this period, alumni played an important role in supporting Morningside. Under Shiran's leadership, the alumni office will continue to involve alumni in new and exciting ways with all of the great things happening at this college.
